

The mission of the Family Health Centers at NYU Langone Psychiatry Residency is to provide excellent, broad-based training in psychiatry with a focus on care delivery within underserved communities and the development of psychiatric competencies to serve diverse populations and communities.

The program trains residents to become superb general psychiatrists with expertise in understanding, evaluating, and treating the complex psychiatric needs of underserved communities and populations. Residents become resilient and well-balanced psychiatrists, capable of working in settings outside the typical psychiatric clinic for populations who often do not seek or receive psychiatric care and have other common medical and neurological disorders that relate to the practice of psychiatry. Our faculty develop psychiatrists who become leaders as scholars and educators, who are committed to lifelong learning related to healthcare disparities and the care of the underserved.
