

As a major academic medical center in the heart of Philadelphia and home to one of the nation's top-ranked medical schools, Jefferson provides clinical training in psychiatry that is fully integrated with the rest of medicine. Our four-year residency is a well-established clinical and academic program that provides highly individualized training for physicians who intend to specialize in psychiatry and work with patients. Each resident is a member of a seminar-size class, so interactive learning and individual instruction and mentoring are provided. Intensive individual supervision, exposure to the wide subspecialty areas in our field, and longitudinal mentoring over the training years help each resident to determine particular interests, talents, and career direction.
