

UCLA-Olive View Psychiatry Residency Training Program

The UCLA-Olive View Psychiatry Residency Training Program is community-based, county-supported, and academically-oriented, and we aim to provide our residents with an outstanding education of great breadth and great depth via active learning in multiple settings where they gain mastery in caring for patients from a broad diversity of backgrounds, with a special focus on underserved and disadvantaged populations. We recognize and value the importance of communication, collaboration, and community in this endeavor, and these pillars guide the mission of our program.

Our residents rotate through a variety of clinical settings, including multiple outpatient clinics in the Los Angeles County Department of Mental Health, the inpatient wards and psychiatric emergency room at Olive View-UCLA Medical Center, the student counseling center at California State University in Northridge, and the Resnick Neuropsychiatric Hospital of UCLA. Residents become adept at working with a variety of patient populations, often with very different treatment modalities. Our long-term outpatient clinic experience begins in the second year of training such that our residents can benefit from longitudinal therapeutic clinical relationships with outpatients for up to three years. In addition, we offer scholarly opportunities and academic mentorship meant to support and foster individual resident interests.
