

Biography

Danielle Turnipseed, JD, MHSA, MPP

Danielle Turnipseed is Chief Public Policy Officer at the Association of American Medical Colleges (AAMC). In this role, Danielle leads the AAMC advocacy team's efforts before the Administration and Congress on important issues impacting medical education and the nation's future doctors including Medicare, Medicaid, graduate medical education slots, important NIH research funding, and workforce issues. Previously, Danielle was Associate Director in the Division of Federal Affairs in the Advocacy Department at the American Medical Association (AMA) and Vice President at America's Health Insurance Plans (AHIP). An attorney, Danielle began her career in Washington, DC as legislative assistant and policy advisor to two United States Senators, and also had a federal clerkship for the US Court of Federal Claims. Danielle maintains her admissions to the highest courts in the District of Columbia, New York, and Maryland. She is also admitted to the US Supreme Court, the US District Court for the District of Columbia, and the US Court of Federal Claims. Danielle received her undergraduate degree from Duke University, her law degree from the University of Maryland, and her public policy and public health dual degrees from the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor.