

Montefiore/Albert Einstein College of Medicine Psychiatry Residency Training Program

The Department of Psychiatry at Montefiore/Albert Einstein College of Medicine was an innovator in the development of social and community psychiatry in the United States, and this aspect of psychiatric training remains central to our program. In addition, our program emphasizes a broad range of treatment and education, ranging from psychodynamic, cognitive and other behavioral therapies to advanced psychopharmacology and neuropsychiatry.

We are located in the Bronx, New York, a vibrant, busy borough and one of the most ethnically diverse areas in the country. Residents have the unique opportunity to manage a wide variety of psychiatric issues, ranging from the common to the esoteric, while considering the biological, psychosocial and cultural needs of patients from a wide variety of socioeconomic and ethnic groups, an experience that is invaluable for later professional life. We have all fellowships within the field of psychiatry available for our residents and multiple research opportunities at our Psychiatric Research Institute of Montefiore and Einstein. We emphasize the importance of education, providing a full day of didactics for all years of training, together with robust clinical experience, in a supportive and collegial environment.
