

The University of Maryland / Sheppard Pratt Psychiatry Residency Program is designed to train residents to be exceptional psychiatrists.

Our residents train in a variety of diverse settings under the supervision of expert faculty members where they learn to treat every patient as an individual deserving of an individualized treatment plan considering the full range of biological, psychological, and social issues impacting their lives and health.

Our training sites include an academic medical center, a freestanding psychiatric hospital, various State hospitals and community clinics, and a VA Medical Center. Through the training at these various sites, our residents learn to care for a diverse group of patients from a broad range of socioeconomic backgrounds. They receive training in all aspects of psychiatry. The educational value of caring for our diverse patient population is enhanced by intensive supervision, a comprehensive didactic curriculum, and case conferences.

Our residents come into our program with diverse interests and from diverse backgrounds. We find this diversity leads to a vibrant and enriching experience. We are committed to recruiting a diverse group of residents into our program and maintaining an inclusive environment. We are also dedicated to caring for our local community in Baltimore.

We look forward to meeting with you and telling you more about our diverse, exciting, and vibrant program. Follow us on Instagram to get an inside look at our program.
